

Title

EN source - machine-translatable excerpt

'You can't be serious,' Declan said, setting down his glass so carefully that the 'More serious than anything I've ever been,' she answered, and for a moment the music between their tables seemed to grow louder. 'Tell me you felt it too. The way the 'I felt my cold beer go warm. That's what I felt.'

He was joking, but not really. She knew the difference the way you learn to know the weather in a man's voice. Outside, the rain had started again, striking the window in a 'Then say it,' she said. 'Say the thing you keep walking around. Say it and we can all Declan opened his mouth, closed it, and started over from the beginning.